about a quiet bedroom at home.

Taken together: blocking light is a reasonable thing to try if light wakes you, but don't expect it to change how your eyes feel. One exception is worth mentioning. Some people sleep with their eyelids slightly open, which can leave the eyes dry, red or irritated in the morning. An eye doctor writing for The Ohio State University describes measures doctors may suggest, including a thick lubricating gel at night, a soft mask to help keep the lids closed, a humidifier and no fan blowing on the face. If you often wake with sore eyes, ask an eye care professional before trying these.
